

The only copyright protection the FCC should mandate on behalf of its customers, the VOTING PUBLIC, is that there should be no copyright protection at all. Any changes to our current system will be much too costly to people like me who have invested money in our present home television viewing products. I cannot afford to upgrade. Even more importantly, copyright protection will only make life more difficult. I want to be able to record and view shows when I am able to. I cannot stay up late enough to watch most of the shows I prefer. The FCC needs to say no to any sort of copyright protection, both now and forever after.
